

Department of Linguistics
Departmental Student Learning Outcomes (SLOs)
Updated November 2018

MA Program

1. Identify and demonstrate understanding of language patterns across a broad range of languages in written papers and oral presentations.
2. Demonstrate understanding of theoretical issues in the current literature in the area of specialization in written papers and oral presentations.
3. Critically assess current theories or findings in the area of specialization in written papers and oral presentations.
4. Demonstrate understanding of research methods and/or analysis techniques in the current literature in the area of specialization in written papers and oral presentations.
5. Apply current research methods and/or analysis techniques to original research in the area of specialization.

PhD Program

1. Identify and demonstrate understanding of language patterns across a broad range of languages in written papers and oral presentations.
2. Demonstrate understanding of theoretical issues in the current literature in the area of specialization in written papers and oral presentations.
3. Critically assess current theories or findings in the area of specialization in written papers and oral presentations.
4. Demonstrate understanding of research methods and/or analysis techniques in the current literature in the area of specialization in written papers and oral presentations.
5. Apply current research methods and/or analysis techniques to original research in the area of specialization with minimal supervision from a faculty advisor.
6. Teach general introductory courses, such as Ling 102, setting one's own curriculum.
7. Teach within one's area of expertise within linguistics.